

Editorial Youth and change

Youth is a driving force for a change. A change is also stipulated with the availability of a force capable of executive the out line or plan of action. A youth is not called as a driving force for the fact that it's with in the scope of certain age limit. It's called as a driving force for the fact that the internal motive of that social sector is determined to bring some thing new with in the frame of its capacity and will. Other wise, a person with an age limit of 24 but not devoted for any change or even against any change should be seen as a youth but not as a driving force.

Therefore, the youth, from whom we all human beings and Eritreans in particular expect some thing new and visual change, should be guided by a clear objective and organizational structure or pattern to carry out the sketched plan of change with in the limited time frame. The beginning of the Eritrean youth movements and their activities observed on timely base is promising and encouraging but still lacks clarity on its objective and organizational pattern. Quantity with out qualitative leadership and structure is some thing incomplete. Quality with out quantifying structure too is like a candle in a tin.

The recent movements of our Eritrean youths though unorganized and uncoordinated as well, the impressive endorsed and the out come registered is encouraging and "yibel iyu." Let's deduce a collective experience from the Arab world youth's movements and predict as what could happen if we bring the PIA's regime down with this disarrayed and sporadic structure. Look! What is happening between the Egyptian Youth Movement and the military institution? Lets not intoxicated by the temporary gains but be farsighted to draw a clear but eternal plan with an authenticated structure to implement our aspirations. Lets be youths of change not of ages.
